* Technique of pastel painting. Pitman 1931 144p illus $7.50 741.2

1 Pastel drawing 2 Pastels 32-1240

"With the publication of 'The Technique of Pastel Painting' the authors' previous work, 'The Art of Painting in Pastel,' is superseded. Their earlier volume was written when the authors were less experienced . . . Continual and varied experiments have made them less positive in their claims for the relative merits of certain technical methods. They now believe that they can be of more service to the serious student if they indicate no personal preferences, but give the results of their investigations into several methods without attempting to influence the reader's personal choice." Chapter one

"The clean drawing and successive stages of building up the color so that erasures are unnecessary are demonstrated in color plates with explanatory text." Pittsburgh

Method for creative design. [Rev. ed] Knopf 1927 183p illus $2.50 745

1 Design, Decorative 38-15941

"The method set forth herein, in a simple and fascinating manner, is primarily for those who love drawing, but have not the time for the study that individual creation requires." Providence

"Mr Best-Maugard explains the fundamental law of design and its seven elements, shows the student how to apply it in his own work and leads him along gradually from the first simple uses of each motive to the more difficult problems of composition, perspective and the representation of the human figure. Throughout there is full and simple exposition of the author's meaning in both the text and the accompanying illustrative designs. The second part of the voume is devoted to philosophical analysis, discussion and representation of the theoretical side of the theme." N.Y. Times

Background with figures; autobiography. Houghton 1930 355p illus o.p. 1948 759.1

1 Artists—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. 30-32610

"In an autobiography as sensitive and restrained as her portraits, America's most distinguished woman painter tells the story of a full and interesting life—her girlhood in Philadelphia, study there with William Sartain and Thomas Eakins, later student days in Paris, friendships with Saint Gaudens, Sargent, and the Gilders and the commission which brought her the privilege of painting war portraits of Clemenceau, Cardinal Mercier and Admiral Beatty." Book rev. digest

"This delightful book of reminiscences bears out the belief that painters are apt to write well. Background with Figures contains much critical comment on painters and on methods and ideals. But Miss Beaux's book is chiefly rich as the personal narrative of a woman both sensitive and alert who lived in a world which has disappeared." Outlook

"While cast in the form of autobiography, much of Mr. Benton's book has to do with the America he discovered when he turned his back on Europe and the east and set out to get acquainted with his native land. Before this come his boyhood in Missouri, art student days in Chicago, New York and Paris, and the steps by which he arrived at an art which is both his own and American. The life he describes is rough, vulgar and often degraded. He is frank about himself to a degree that will offend some readers. But his book makes clear what he is getting at in his painting." "Autobiography of an English artist, well-known for her pictures of circus life. Beginning with the poverty-stricken childhood in northern England she describes vividly the years of her rise to prominence, her studies in England and on the continent, her happy marriage, her trip to America where she was one of the two European representatives for the Carnegie Institute exhibit, and her later years as an acknowledged success. The book is illustrated with many reproduction of the author's work." Book rev. digest

"What Dame Laura Knight stands for is clearly written in this book, and he will be a dull reader who does not feel as he turns the last page that he has not only followed the varying fortunes of a remarkable artist but has also watched the development and gradual unfolding of a great personality. Autobiography rarely achieves this effect." Manchester guardian

It aims to review in general what has been accomplished in Europe since 1900 and to take stock of what is going on in the United States along similar experimental lines. . . "From the confusing mass of modernist painters in France M. Raynal has selected fifty 'who have sought to enrich the technic of their art and realize new conceptions of painting.' An introductory essay subdivides the school minutely, so elaborately indeed that it is evident that there is no coherent school at all, but merely so many diverging types of revolt against the Renaissance dogma of art as imitation of nature. There follows an alphabetical catalogue with biographical notices of the painters and citations from their sayings or writings about their ideals of work. This feature is very convenient for reference and introduces a number of interesting painters who are unknown or nearly so even to the up-to-date American amateur. At the end are about one hundred good half-tone cuts, generally two for each artist, alphabetically presented." Sat. rev. of lit.

"The illustrations, mostly enlarged details of prints, show the distinctive features of the three general groups of print making—planographic, relief, and intaglio. General principles of these processes are described and the tools and how they were used are illustrated. Collectors especially will appreciate this aid in diagnosing the process of a print. Illustrations are from prints of the nineteenth century and earlier." Bkl.

"An introductory work written on the vocational school level and intended chiefly for use in organized classes. However, beginners working by themselves should find it helpful, for the directions are detailed and are supplemented by an adequate number of illustrations. The subjects listed in the contents are treated from the amateur's viewpoint. For example, the chapter on letterpress printing deals with hand composition but makes no attempt to discuss the linotype or other typesetting machines." Current reference bks.

Brown, Calvin S.—Continued

"The work is divided into four general sections. The first of these (Chapters I-IV) deals with preliminary considerations and discusses the elements which music and literature have in common. The second (Chapters V-VIII) considers their collaboration in vocal music. The third (Chapters IX-XVII), after a preliminary investigation of the structural principles of the two arts, discusses the influence of music on literature and the attempts of writers to model their work on musical compositions. And the fourth (Chapters XVIII-XXII) is concerned with the converse problem of the effect of literature on music, especially as it is seen in program music." Preface

* What to listen for in music. McGraw 1939 281p music (Whittlesey house publications) $2.75 780

1 Music—Analysis, appreciation (W) 39-27073

Discusses how to listen to music from the composer's point of view. The author first treats of the creative process and the elements of musical anatomy—rhythm, melody, simple harmonic structure. He then gives an explanation of the principal musical forms—simple dance forms, the fugue, the variation, the sonata, the symphony, the symphonic poem, the opera. With musical illustrations

"He is a composer. He writes about music from the inside. He is so familiar with the creative process in music that he is not impressed by it; and he knows his subject so thoroughly that he can be simple about it." Yale review

Music and women; the story of women in their relation to music. Coward-McCann 1948 323p illus $5 780

1 Women as musicians 48-5215

"An extensive and valuable study of women in their relation to music from earliest times down to the present. The dominant place of women in primitive tribes as attested by anthropological studies carries over into the field of music. In Greek times when man became the aggressor woman's leadership was pushed into the background leading to inhibitions in music as well as in other phases of life —inhibitions which are only beginning to be overcome today. Miss Drinker believes that when women are able to release their imaginations from age-long repressions, they again will become a force in the realm of music." Library journal

1 Music—Dictionaries 2 Musicians—Dictionaries [28-9450]

A popular reprint containing all the material in the latest edition (3d ed. edited by H. C. Colles 1927-28) except that the twenty-five color plates in that edition are here printed in black and white

Volume 6 is the American supplement edited by Waldo Pratt and C. N. Boyd, first published 1920. For the new edition this volume has not been revised but an appendix of 26 pages of additional material has been added to the reprint of the 1920 edition

"The standard encyclopedia in English, covering the whole field . . . with special emphasis, however, on English subjects. Has good articles by specialists and bibliographies. Includes articles on musical history, theory and practice, instruments, terms, etc., biographies of musicians and articles on individual compositions, all in one alphabet. Does not give plots of operas." Mudge

"The new volume has the primary purpose of chronicling events which have occurred in the thirteen years since the third edition went to press, [1927-1928] and the secondory one of amplifying the information of that edition. Thus, in addition to many new entries, it continues the biographies of living musicians, and enlarges on those of the past where further research, or a new point of view, has made such enlargement desirable." "Eight essays by a well known American composer and music critic, several of which have appeared in 'American Mercury,' 'Harper's,' and other periodicals. They deal entertainingly with the problems of present-day music. The essays are followed by papers on general topics, particularly rhythm, with five on Beethoven." Bkl.

"The manner of Mr. Mason's writing is always vivacious and entertaining; he has a beautiful soundness and sanity, and his direction is always away from the obvious and literal, towards spontaneity and spirit. Whether or not one stands shoulder to shoulder with him in so sweeping a denunciation of the modernists, at least one must acknowledge the book as fascinating reading." Boston Transcript

In a vast array of interesting material, these items deserve special mention: the full treatment of popular and folk music; the discussion of the guitar . . . the deservedly high praise of Cabezón, the blind 'Spanish Bach of the sixteenth century,' and the ample attention given to organ and symphonic music; the many references to the contribution of the Gypsies; the account, brief but informing, of the importance of Hispanic music into the Americas . . . the recognition of the musical significance of dance, theater and opera; and the adequate stress upon religious music." American music is traced from its modest beginnings in the Colonial Period through the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, until it comes of age in the twentieth century. The Prologues which have been added to the Revised Edition are an attempt to help the reader feel that music is a part of the whole of civilization." Preface

"A straightforward account of the development of music from the ancient Greek period through the medieval and renaissance manifestations to the twentieth century. Two thirds of the book is devoted to the period after 1600. A final chapter is prophetic of the future trends of music. First published 1929. In the 1946 edition the author states that "it is not only desirable, but necessary, to revise the book completely, to adjust certain viewpoints to changing conditions, to re-evaluate, to add to the discussion of composers included in the original volumes the many works they have composed more recently, and also to include the several hundred composers who became recognized after 1931." Preface to second revised edition

"This survey of 300 years of music in America will fill a useful place in libraries. Beginning with New England psalmody, it traces the development of music, in folk song, national air, the concert stage and musical composition, to the present day. Has a section devoted to biographical sketches of contemporary composers and is well indexed for use." Wis. bul.

This volume contains "a collection of the most significant early material on Johann Sebastian Bach. The figure of Bach is here revealed in his own words, in the testimony of his contemporaries, and in the judgments of the generations immediately following his own. The material has been gathered together in one volume for the first time; much of it has never appeared in English before. The items, which in general are presented in chronological order, are coordinated by the essays of 'Johann Sebastian Bach, a Portrait in Outline,' and 'The Story of His Fame.' Where explanations were necessary they have been inserted in brackets or given as footnotes. But in general it has been [the] aim to let the original sources speak for themselves." Preface

Reprint of a book first published by Crowell in 1934

"Stephen C. Foster, composer of Old Folks at Home, Old Black Joe and many more songs, most of them written for negro minstrels, was born in Pittsburgh in 1826 and died in Bellevue Hospital, New York, in 1864. Mr Howard's biography is full, comprehensive and factual, based on family letters and documents, many of them incorporated in his text. Chronology." Book rev. digest

"While the important thing, of course, is that [the author] has made possible for the first time a full understanding of this lovable and pathetic personality who created the music that even yet lies closest to the heart of the American people, he has also made no small contribution to the social history of the country before and during the Civil war." "A penetrating, satisfactory study of the 'Swedish nightingale' as artist and woman. With religion and love of home and children dominating her art, her biographer shows how easy it was for her to abandon her career at its height." Pittsburgh

"The author does his task responsibly, and is the more to be commended because he does not pretend to have found any magic key to a true spiritual interpretation. He also discusses stage careers in general . . . The wide variety of his references is also a point of merit, since it helps to vitalize the picture of Jenny Lind in relation to her age." But it must be borne in mind that he intended to write only about Liszt the man and to correct the false impression left by earlier biographers. It remains for a future biographer to synthesize in a well-rounded manner the material now made available. The present volume is copiously documented and well illustrated." Springfield Republican

"M. Basch does not try to retrace the inner developments of Schumann, nor is he greatly concerned with the composer's works. He merely recounts the outward circumstances in the life of one who, to the author, was the 'interpreter of moral suffering and palpitating emotion, of aspirations towards an Infinite full of mystery, and descents into unfathomable abysses.' The style remains French, even in the English translation." Sat. rev. of lit.

In the first place, it concerns Sibelius, about whom surprisingly little has appeared in book form, in spite of the great vogue now enjoyed by his music in both this country and England. In the second place, there is the author herself, long an authority on Russian music and literature, as well as the learned and engrossing annotator of the Queen's Hall Concerts. . . It tells in detail of the rise and membership of a musical kindred and of the length and nature of the influence exerted by them." Introduction

"This new book about the Strauss dynasty steps rightly into a vacant place that has long waited for it. If it is somewhat ponderous in approach and if it stresses the social rather than the more human aspects of the Strauss geniuses, it nevertheless is altogether illuminating and altogether valuable. It also has that wrenching bitter-sweet perfume of the Vienna that has gone." Sat. rev. of lit.

"This book on the harmonization of melodies and the rules of modulation has long been considered in Europe a standard manual by an authority. The exercises are graded in the order of difficulty, and, as far as practicable, are arranged for self-instruction. This first English edition is a translation of the twelfth Russian edition which was revised and completed by Professors Joseph Withol and Maximilian Steinberg." Bkl.

It owes its inception to the author's often expressed conviction that these two courses of study cannot be separated; and also to a constantly strengthening belief that the most rational, quickest and best way to acquire a thorough knowledge of the chords and their uses (the recognized purpose of the study of Harmony) is to begin with one part, to pass from that to two, from that to three, and thus gradually arrive at full four-part harmony." Reprint of the original 3 volume edition published by Knopf 1928-30

Contents: v 1 Richard Wagner; v2 Mozart to Thomas; v3 Verdi to Puccini

The author tells the story of each opera combined with a descriptive analysis of the music. He writes for the ordinary music-lover who has neither time nor opportunity nor aptitude to study scores and musical history and biography for himself. The "story" comprises not only the plot, but also something of its origin and the circumstances surrounding the composition and presentation of the opera

First published 1940

A collection of nearly 200 songs with with music for voice and piano. The text supplies their backgrounds from colonial times to the present

"Inevitably, any such book must be compared with Carl Sandburg's classic. It includes fewer songs—Some [200], as against 270 songs, or fragments of songs, in the 'Songbag.' But the 'Treasury' covers a wider range; and it is a more musicianly book. All the songs have full accompaniments and master-musicians who do not spell out tunes with one finger, as I do at my best, have always held the frailty of the accompaniments against Carl Sandburg's book. . . Yet this is no highbrow collection; this is American song." Boston Transcript

"The song hits of four decades, beginning with the 70s, make up this collection. Both words and music are given, with a page or two of text telling the history of the song and something about the composer. Includes such old favorites as Silver threads among the gold, White wings, After the ball, and In the baggage coach ahead." Bkl.

"A fascinating book. It fascinates those who know all of the songs whose words, music and history are contained between the book's covers; and it will fascinate those who know only a few of these remembered songs . . . Mr. Geller has done a remarkable job of condensation, and the information he gives about each song is accurate." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

"That Caruso's marvelous singing was due less to the perfection of his vocal organs than to his qualifications for the natural placement of his voice is the author's contention and point of departure. Another contention is that the art of good singing is at present fast deteriorating. The aim of the book is, accordingly, to lay down the new scientific principles of the mechanism of voice production with suggestions for a thorough reconstruction of voice culture. The author . . . was Caruso's medical as well as vocal adviser. Among the illustrations are many anatomical plates both in color and in black and white and X-ray photographs showing the position of the organs in vowel production, also facsimile letters, by Caruso and others, endorsing the author's methods. A set of vocal exercises is given." Book rev. digest

1 Musical instruments (W) 45-10303

"In seven chapters the instruments of the West are treated within the great epochs of history, from the Stone Age to our present day. A period of about twenty-five thousand years is thus covered. . . Each chapter starts with an introduction summarizing the cultural and artistic trends of the period. Then follows a discussion of the different instruments, which, as far as possible, are dealt with in the same order in every chapter." Preface

"The historic method of treating all the instruments of one period shows the connection of the instruments with culture and arts of the period and makes the book useful as a supplement to a general history of music." Bkl.

"This book is a reworking of eight lectures delivered by Dr. Apel in 1944 at the Lowell Institute of Boston. In a general way, it surveys most of the landmarks from the earliest keyboard music to that of recent times. Summary accounts of the organ, harpsichord, clavichord, and pianoforte are presented, and organ music is included in the discussion up to the point where idiomatic music for the stringed keyboard instruments can be clearly distinguished. There being no space for Kleinmeister, emphasis is placed on the significance of each era and the contributions of the masters." Music lib. assn. notes

First published 1937. "In the second edition a discussion of the straddle form has been added to the chapter on the running high jump. New topics have been included which deal with preparations for a track and field meet, track and field construction, and the responsibilities of the various officials. Items which proved to be more or less obsolete have been deleted. . . . The subject matter has been rearranged so as to offer an improved sequence." Preface to second edition

The aim of the authors is to place in a single volume material which is adequate for developing the beginner as well as for improving the performance of the advanced athlete. The technique of each event is presented in some detail, schedules of practice are included for each event, and subjects closely allied to track and field athletics are discussed

"A valuable book for teachers of literature in high schools and colleges, and for others who are working with young people. The author explains the effects of social influences on writers, of psychological stresses and social background on a student's enjoyment of literature, and shows how familiarity with literature fosters a better understanding of life and people. Though written from the progressive point of view, the formal attitude towards literature as an end in itself is fully appreciated." Bkl.

"This volume is a revision of lectures . . . in which Mr. Lewis discusses the nature of the poetic image and the use of it by English poets, past and present. . . . In the final chapter, Mr. Lewis deals with the archtypal theory of images, but insists that the poet, though being advised and strengthened by the past, must then get on his way to the light and living. He ends with a constructive appeal to poets of the atomic age to give to their own generation images of virtue—natural, consoling, heartening." Christian science monitor

Art of the novel; critical prefaces; with an introduction by Richard P. Blackmur. Scribner 1934 xxxix, 348p $3 809.3
1 Fiction—History and criticism
34-37463

This book contains the prefaces to his novels written by Henry James for the New York edition of his works. In addition to explaining how each story developed, the prefaces also set forth James' whole theory of the art and philosophy of fiction

"To those who have been put off from knowing [the prefaces] by the fact that they have, until now, been so annoyingly scattered, they will come as a revelation and a joy. I do not see—have never seen—how any one who really reads them can read fiction with quite the same eyes as before." C. H. Grattan in N.Y. Times

"In support of his contention that the great novelists are those who are most sensitive to the spirit of their time, the author discourses on those writers who seem to him to fit his definition. Fielding, Richardson and Smollett, Scott, Dickens, Eliot, Conrad, Balzac, and Dostoevsky are among those chosen from the acknowledged masters, but there are also many usually accounted minor, such as Disraeli, Butler, Wells, and a number of nineteenth-century Russians. Also included are narrative poets, both famous and obscure, such as John Galt, Thomas Hood, and Walt Whitman." Bkl.

1 American literature—History and criticism 2 U.S.—History 3 U.S.—Social life and customs 33-28565

"A companion volume to 'Social Backgrounds of English Literature,' by Boas and Hahn [class 820.9] It presents in brief compass those aspects of social history which have most definitely influenced American literature. It also discusses representative literary works in close relationships to the social conditions from which they evolved. . . It is prepared for beginners in the study of literature and aims to make them aware that American literature . . . is a direct reflection of the American social environment." Preface

1 American literature—History and criticism 2 U.S.—Intellectual life 36-10024

A college textbook giving a critical and historical account of American literature from colonial times to the present. Book lists at ends of chapters. "Facts about authors" in condensed form in appendix

It "makes plain and fascinating the relationship between American life and the literature which it produced, and the resultant life influenced by that literature. Although it is a textbook it reads like an essay—of immense length but of unfailing interest." Chicago Daily Tribune

"Van Wyck Brooks has fused into a glowing narrative, not only the atmosphere of the period but also charming, mellow and authentic portraits of the leading figures from Ticknor, Prescott, Hawthorne, Emerson, on through Lowell, Motley and Holmes. There are brilliant summaries of each one's work; and there are delightful recreations of groups gathered in clubs or at Brooks Farm, and of friendly talk on a walking trip. . . First of a number of volumes planned to sketch the literary history of the United States." N.Y. libraries

First edition 1933

"Believing that the dominant factor in American life since the Civil war has been the rise of industrialism, this critic interprets American literature of the past seventy years by analyzing outstanding writers in terms of their relation to social and economic history. Temperate in tone and well informed, the book will be enjoyed even by readers who do not accept the author's theory of the necessity of identification of literature with class struggle." Bkl.

First published 1913

A readable textbook. The author says that he has "tried to emphasize the men and the books that reflect the national traditions," and that he has given considerable attention to colonial and revolutionary writers, as a background for the present. The history is divided into 5 periods, for each of which he gives a survey of social and political conditions, of its literature, and a discussion of the separate writers, major and minor. Does not go beyond the 19th century

"My main subject [is] the conceptions held by five of our major writers concerning the function and nature of literature, and the degree to which their practice bore out their theories. That may make their process sound too deliberate, but Emerson, Thoreau, and Whitman all commented very explicitly on language as well as expression, and the creative intentions of Hawthorne and Melville can be readily discerned through scrutiny of their chief works." This volume contains "White Buildings," "The Bridge" and forty-four of Hart Crane's unpublished verses, including "Key West: an island sheaf," the sequence of poems which he had completed just before his death

"Most of the posthumous pieces seem fragmentary, but the longest of them, 'Eternity,' is an extraordinarily fine poem which shows Crane in a new role, that of a reporter with a sharp, quick, cinematic style. A dozen early poems are printed in an appendix, together with an essay on 'Modern Poetry' which proves that the poet wrote good prose—something his private letters would prove more abundantly." New republic

Crane, Stephen, 1871-1900

Collected poems; ed. by Wilson Follett. Knopf 1930 132p $2.50 811

30-9605

"Stephen Crane, the romanticist and adventurer and the novelist of the '90s, published during his short lifetime two books of poetry: 'The Black Riders,' and 'War is Kind.' These two volumes, together with certain other more recently discovered poems, are now given us again in the 'Collected Poems.'" Book rev. digest

"There is nothing contemptible in the least of his poems. Acidulous and brilliant, unappreciated in his time, these elliptical concisions have not yet received their due from a generation which employs their very technique. . . It is a cause for gratification that the . . . [publisher has] risked the first complete—and popularly priced—collection of Crane's concisely intimate poetry." Sat. rev. of lit.

13-25781

Includes "Lyrics of lowly life," "Lyrics of the hearthside," "Lyrics of love and laughter," and "Lyrics of sunshine and shadow," with a few other poems. Introduction by W. D. Howells

"Dunbar is the first American negro of pure African blood to reveal innate distinction in literature; as W. D. Howells has said, 'to feel the negro life esthetically and express it lyrically.' His dialect pieces are delightful." Review of reviews

Eliot, Thomas Stearns, 1888-
* Collected poems, 1909-1935. Harcourt 1936 220p $3 811

36-12053

Contains all of the author's poems published from 1909 to 1935 and several poems not previously published

"Collected Poems is a valuable and fascinating book because it gives a bird's-eye view of Mr. Eliot's poetic progress, from his early, brilliant but derivative excursions right up to the present day. It is particularly interesting, for example, to see the admirable choruses of The Rock divorced from their somewhat less stimulating context, and to be able to trace Mr. Eliot's link with the main tradition of English devotional verse." New Statesman and Nation

Four quartets. Harcourt 1943 39p $2 811

"These are four long poems, in a new form described by Mr. Eliot as 'quartets.' The first of the four poems is 'Burnt Norton', which was published as the concluding poem of Mr. Eliot's 'Collected Poems, 1909-1935'. 'Burnt Norton' heralded a sequence; in due course it was followed by 'East Coker', which was published in this country in 'The Partisan Review' in 1940, and by 'The Dry Salvages', published in the same magazine in 1941. The sequence has now been completed by 'Little Gidding', a fourth poem of the same length and in the same form, which appears in this country for the first time in this volume." Publisher's note

"This collection of sonnets is the work of a minor poet who impresses a personality on everything she writes, who is often a most accomplished technician in the sonnet form, and whose best examples will always find a place in any anthology of romantic verse." Atlantic bookshelf

Conversation at midnight. Harper 1937 126p $2 811

(W) 37-16334

"In this sequence of poems, a dialog participated in by six men of different backgrounds, Miss Millay has departed from the lyrical form in which she has found such great success. The conversation is the conversation of today: politics, war, fascism, communism. It is probably not the best of the poet's work, but it is provocative and timely, and there are passages of great beauty." Bkl.

Trial of a poet, and other poems. Harcourt 1947 81p $2 811

Contents: Recapitulations; The progress of Faust; Trial of a poet

"The title poem is an examination of the poet's role in modern civilization. Other short, serious poems deal with current questions, some of them having to do with the war, and there is an autobiographical group of short pieces, most of them in ballad form. Competent craftsmanship. Some of the material has appeared in magazines." Bkl.

* V-letter, and other poems. Harcourt 1944 63p $2 811
44-6977

Awarded Pulitzer prize 1945

"In his introduction Mr Shapiro says: 'Since the war began I have tried to be on guard against becoming a 'war poet' . . . There is no need to discuss the private psychological tragedy of a soldier. It is not the commonplace of suffering or the platitudinous comparison with the peace, or the focus on the future that should occupy us; but the spiritual progress or retrogression of the man in war, the increase or decrease in his knowledge of beauty, government and religion.' In keeping with these intentions, these poems disclose a poet who is both soldier and person." N.Y. Times

Awarded the Pulitzer prize for 1938

"Drama of life in a small New Hampshire village, called Grover's Corners. The people of the village go about their daily affairs, thru a few years in the early 1900s, and then some of them experience death. Altho when produced little or no scenery is used, the play has a stage manager who links together the separate parts of the action with running comment, somewhat in the manner of the Greek chorus." Bkl.

"Not Under Forty has a title which, according to the author, means that 'the book will have little interest for people under 40 years of age.' It is to be hoped that 'people under 40' will disappoint Miss Cather of her gloomy prophecy. "How much more satisfactory as a critic Mr. Eliot is when he is writing literary criticism than when he is elucidating the ethical or other principles on which he works. The essay on Pascal, in particular, is a brilliant and profound piece of writing, quite one of the best essays which Mr. Eliot has written in recent years, and the essay on 'In Memoriam' is little inferior to it." "It is a wide range of subjects upon which Mr. Howells philosophizes in this volume, but the reader will enjoy it because it is his philosophy whether the . . . author discusses vaudeville, women, New York, the luxuries of travel, dressing for a hotel dinner, a day at Bronx Park or any of the delightful assortment of things to which he treats us in these thirty-five varied chapters." "Thirty-nine scattered articles and reviews by William James. None of these has heretofore appeared in book form." Preface

"They have been selected with remarkable skill. Not only do they amply fulfill their purpose of tracing the stages by which James's thought developed, they also make up, thanks to the cunning way in which technical studies are blended with articles of wider interest, a book that will attract alike the student of philosophy and the general reader." 1 English literature—History and criticism [24-23319]

Reprint of a book first published 1923 by Nelson

A survey of English literature intended to occupy a middle place between the textbook and the elaborate compendium in several volumes. The parts were prepared by specialists, many of them associated with English universities. In general the same plan is followed for each author; separate sections for life and character, works, and style. Extracts are given only to illustrate a point of criticism. The book does not attempt to cover 20th century writers

He is "pre-eminently a popular poet, deriving his surest inspiration from the life of the Irish people today, but frequently lifting this local material to a level of general human significance, through his ability to invest it with a note of ideal beauty and tenderness." Dial

Cowper, William, 1731-1800

Poetical works; ed. by H. S. Milford. 4th ed. Oxford 1934 xxx, 684p (Oxford standard authors) $1.50 821

36-8492

"Cowper, though not among the great poets of England, holds a unique place, partly by virtue of the personality which shines in every line of his poetry, partly by virtue of the sincerity and simplicity which, 'keeping its eye on the object,' saw beauty and consolation in common things, till then neglected, but eagerly seized upon by his successors and transformed into material for their profoundest and noblest art." Cambridge hist. of Eng. lit.

Includes all the poems from "The veil" and "Fleeting" and almost all from "Flora," selections from "Crossings" and "The three royal monkeys," and other occasional rhymes written within the dates

"Lovers of De La Mare's strange, frost-filigree and moonlight craftsmanship will find in this large volume one example after another in which his wonderful technique is exercised upon a real mood of poetic insight and intensity. The reader realizes afresh how visual rather than oral this poet is in his workmanship. . . On the printed page his magic is inescapable." Christian science monitor

Dobson, Austin, 1840-1921

Complete poetical works. Oxford 1923 xxiii, 525p front (Oxford standard authors) $3 821

24-15714

"A deft master of light verse. In his 'vignettes in rhyme' he revives for us the movement and color of his beloved eighteenth century in France and England, in shrewd character sketches and lively anecdotes, mingling wisdom and sentiment with delightful fancy. Although Dobson's art is frankly conventional and bookish, the grace and ease of his verse raise him high in the ranks of minor poets." English and Pope's What to read

Gay, John, 1685-1732

Poetical works including "Polly," "The beggar's opera," and selections from the other dramatic work, ed. by G. C. Faber. Oxford 1926 xlvii, 700p front o.p. 1948 821

27-26598

The introduction is largely textual and there is also a bibliographical summary and a discussion of the doubtful poems. Indexes to titles, first lines, and first lines of the songs in the operas

"The originality of Gay's talent is to be found . . . in a clear-sighted realism, with an inclination to irony, which alternates between the sense of and search for the picturesque, and parody. There is in him a kind of intellectual cynicism that knows how to see freely and make us actually see, and thus to emerge from convention." Legouis and Cazamian's Hist. of Eng. literature

Gibson, Wilfrid Wilson, 1878-

Collected poems, 1905-1925. Macmillan 1926 xxiii, 791p front $3.50 821

Hardy, Thomas, 1840-1928

* Collected poems. Macmillan 1926 xxviii, 818p $3.75 821

27-26086

"There have been many poets among us . . . poets of sure talent, and it may be even of genius, but no other of them has this compulsive power of Hardy. The secret is not hard to find. Not one of them is adequate to what we know and have suffered. . . Therefore we deliberately set Mr Hardy among the greatest." Athenaeum

Henley, William Ernest, 1849-1903

Poems. Macmillan 1921 289p o.p. 1948 821

Contents: In hospital; Bric-à-brac; Echoes; Rhymes and rhythms; Hawthorn and lavender; London voluntaries; London types; Three prologues; For England's sake; Epicedia; Song of speed

"There are echoes . . . of old ballads, of standard verse, of modern singers as various as Tennyson and Emily Brontë and Swinburne. But, even in these . . . Henley almost always contrives to blend an original tone." Cambridge hist. of Eng. lit.

Herbert, George, 1593-1633

Poems. Oxford 1913 327p (Oxford standard authors) $3 821

The introduction by Arthur Waugh contains biographical as well as critical material. The poet's works in Greek and Latin are given in addition to his English poems, and all are indexed by first lines

Herrick, Robert, 1591-1674

Poetical works. Oxford 1921 446p (Oxford standard authors) $3 821

[15-27760]

An edition based on the library edition edited by F. W. Moorman and published in 1915. The brief introduction is by another hand. Indexes of titles and first lines

Herrick was "a cavalier pastoral poet. His lyrics dwell on love, flowers, music, precious stones, etc., agreeable to the court life and fancies of Stuart days." Pratt alcove

Hood, Thomas, 1799-1845

Complete poetical works; ed. with notes by Walter Jerrold. Oxford 773p front (Oxford standard authors) $3 821

13-12349

This edition contains a brief introduction and a chronological table of the poet's life, notes, and index of first lines

Hood "was the poet of the heart, and sound at heart himself,—the poet of humane sentiment, clarified by a living spring of humor, which kept it from any taint of sentimentalism. To read his pages is to laugh and weep by turns; to take on human charity. . . Even his artistic weaknesses (and he has no other) were frolicsome and endearing." E. C. Stedman

Housman, Alfred Edward, 1859-1936

tions; Note on the text; Chronology of the poems; Index of first lines and titles
"It is a volume for all admirers of the man who has been called the greatest English poet of our day. . . As a whole, the latest additions to the body of Housman's work add little to the original 'Shropshire Lad' and 'Last poems.' But there are poems among them. . .that may stand with the best of such flawless lyric writing as English poetry is not likely to see soon again." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Some of the author's poems are also available as follows:
Housman, A. E. Last poems. Holt 1922 79p $1.75 821

Last poems; ed. by Richard Aldington and Giuseppe Orioli, with an introduction. Viking 1933 316p o.p. 1948 821
33-10247

"These poems are moving, for they approximate a spiritual record of Lawrence's life during his last year. Technically they are not among his best, some are very slight, but they are direct and sincere and show the intense vitality and strong personality peculiar to Lawrence." Cincinnati

Selected poems; with an introduction by Kenneth Rexroth. New directions 1947 148p (New classics ser) $1.50 821
48-5258

"A collection of some of Lawrence's poems from his early Georgian countryside poetry, through the 'mother,' dialect, and love poems to his free verse, epigrams, and death poems. There is a critical introduction by the editor and a chronology of some of the main events of Lawrence's life." Book rev. digest

Macaulay, Thomas Babington Macaulay, 1st baron, 1800-1859
Lays of ancient Rome, and other historical poems; with an introduction by George Macaulay Trevelyan. Longmans 1928 182p illus o.p. 1948 821
1 Rome—History—Poetry 28-23843

Contents: Introduction; Preface; Horatius; Battle of the Lake Regillus; Virginia; Prophecy of Capys; Ivry; Armada; Battle of Moncontour; Naseby; Last buccaneer; Epitaph on a Jacobite; An early revision of the Armada; Battle of Bosworth Field

"It was Macaulay's conjecture that the half-legendary history of Rome's earliest days was preserved for generations in ballad form. The ballads were lost, but the legends were re-told by the historians. In the 'Lays of Ancient Rome' Macaulay sought to 'reverse that process, to transform some portions of early Roman history back into the poetry out of which they were made'. . . It may be said that these poems are so stirring that their author seems almost to have been a Roman citizen, exulting in the heroic past of his people." English & Pope's What to read

MacNeice, Louis, 1907-
Poems, 1925-1940. Random house 1940 326p $2.50 821
(W) 41-2162

A more complete edition than that published by Random house in 1937. The 1940 collection contains over 75 poems not listed in the former collection

Contents: Early poems: 1925-1929; Poems: 1931-1935; Longer poems; Out of the picture: 1936-1937; Poems: 1936-1938; Autumn journal: 1938; Poems: 1939-1940

"MacNeice is perhaps too emphatically contemporary, insisting again and again upon the wireless, the factory chimneys, the policemen and the buses. Yet this is the main interest of the substance of his poems, that the circumference is always social and the center is always personal." Poetry

Masefield, John, 1878-

* Poems. Complete ed. with recent poems. Macmillan 1935 2v in 1 $7 821

35-5388

"As for the poems here presented again, there can be no question that certain of them, lyrics, sonnets, and narratives alike, will live for some time. The stamp of a powerful and impressive personality is upon them. Masefield is no great philosopher, but he is a noble one; and he knows the true springs of song and is a natural narrator." "While she naturally displayed a temper akin to her brother's . . . large parts, and some of the best parts, of her poetical accomplishment are quite distinct from anything of his. . . . Her lyrics have a lighter, more bird-like, movement and voice than his stately descants; she is less prone to an extreme regularity of metre, and her whole tone is often different. . . . Her most characteristic strain is where . . . pathos blends with, or passes into, the utterance of religious awe, unstained and unweakened by any craven fear." George Saintsbury

Rossetti, Dante Gabriel, 1828-1882

Poems and translations, 1850-1870. . . Oxford 482p front (Oxford standard authors) o.p. 1948 821

Contains also a prose story "Hand and soul" and the poet's translations from the Italian: the poets before Dante, Dante and his circle, and Dante's "Vita nuova"

The "work of the poet-painter who with Millais, Hunt and others founded the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood in protest against existing conventions in art and literature. With the publication of his Poems in 1870 Rossetti was quickly acclaimed as a new poet of originality and beauty." Pratt alcove

"Collected edition of this noted poet's work of over thirty years, including all the poems of 'The Old Huntsman,' 'Counter-Attack,' 'Picture-Show,' 'Satirical Poems,' 'The Road to Ruin,' 'Virgils,' and 'Rhymed Ruminations.'" Retail bookseller

"Mr. Sassoon gives us what may be accurately termed a large selection of his poems between about 1908 and 1940- a book for general reading, and one which has certainly not appeared before its due time. The extant small selections have tended to obscure the variousness of the poet's mind and his wide reflections of personal and public experience." Spectator

"View editions"

"In this new collection of poems, Miss Sitwell continues to prove her skill with words, sounds, and subtle rhythms. The verse is deeply reflective, somewhat elusive and remote, slightly introversive and self-conscious. Through it runs a wistful questioning from the pen of the mature poet, who looks on while the newer generation begins its development." Christian science monitor

Selected poems; with an essay on her own poetry. Houghton 1937 285p o.p. 1948 821

[37-490]

"Rare and varied poems, distinguished by the great technical skill and sharp use of words, natural to this great English poet." Cincinnati

"By an almost constant utilizing of the effects of synaesthesia—the associations of visual sensations with auditory, of tactual sensations with visual, etc.—she contrives to create a hard, brittle world that has something of the unreal theatrical quality of the world of Rousseau." Manly and Rickert's Contemporary British literature

Song of the cold. Vanguard 1948 113p $2.75 821

48-9292

"The 'Song of the cold' (with different content from the book of the same name published in England) is a magnificent selection from a poet who has now attained the full development of her powers. Those who knew her early work and regarded her as the eccentric technician of artificial, highly ornamental verse, may be unprepared by the passion, the prophetic expression and unexpected simplicity to be found in the late flowering of her genius." "Spender's poetry is both personal and universal, expressing in vivid imagery the problems of our age and his own sympathies." Cleveland

Poems. Random house 1934 68p o.p. 1948 821

34-35674

"Stephen Spender, with his first book of poems, shows promise of being the best lyric poet of his generation in England. . . His talents are obvious, and one is made aware of his ease of movement, freshness, and clarity. He is still a trifle overfond of generalizing his emotions and of dodging the concrete image. These are habits that have afflicted all minor romantic poetry, but such flaws are rare in his work; his statement of affirmation carries everything before it." Nation

"The collected poems, supplemented by over two hundred and fifty pages of notes analyzing the poems exhaustively. Includes some biographical data, an index to first lines, and a title-index of poems and notes." Book rev. digest

"Thompson has written, amidst the pains of a grievous life, some masterpieces filled with a strangely sumptuous and ample harmony, in which amplitude and sumptuousness are not always reconciled, and in which poetry at times is the loser for their secret struggle. The instants of their union possess a supreme beauty, which reminds one of Keats; but even more beautiful are those in which breadth of inspiration predominates, and enforces its sway." "An evaluation of poets and their work from the Anglo-Saxon period to 1939. Written as a source of information for the general reader rather than as a textbook. Poets of the twentieth century treated briefly in 30 pages. A select bibliography, p.571-585." Bkl.

Gummere, Francis Barton, 1855-1919

The popular ballad. Houghton 1907 360p (Types of English literature) o.p. 1948 821.09

1 Ballads 7-18086

"Prof. Gummere starts out with a severely critical consideration of just what must be meant by 'popular' as applied to ballads and rules out all but about 300 specimens of the genre. . . He restricts the present study to these remnants of oral tradition, divides them into half a dozen classes, studies their sources, and gives a critical estimate of their worth . . . He has a cleverness of statement and an ability to use aptly and vividly a very great fund of erudition that will make his book entertaining as well as instructive for the general reader, while the special student will find it a mine of information." Road to Xanadu; a study in ways of the imagination. [Rev. ed] Houghton 1930 639p $2.95 821.09

1 Coleridge, Samuel Taylor, 1772-1834 2 Imagination [27-9075]

First published 1927

"In this exhaustive study of the genesis of two great poems of Coleridge, the Rime of the ancient mariner and Kubla Khan, Professor Lowes traces the working of the creative imagination, the growth of the poet's vision and the way he brings ordered unity out of the shapes and images which haunt the background of his mind." Book rev. digest

"There has gone into it love and industry, sensitiveness and scholarship. . . intuition and imagination of a rare kind. . . In addition to being a contribution to criticism and scholarship it must also be a valuable contribution to psychology." Pittsburgh

23-9073

Contents: Compromise of the king of the Golden isles; Flight of the Queen; Cheezo; Good bargain; If Shakespeare lived to-day; Fame and the poet

"Shows the author a little less inclined than usual to wander to dim palaces beyond the sunset and to enter 'faery land forlorn.' While the fantastic elements are not lacking, and one may find much of the gloss and shimmer with which Dunsany usually decorates his work, yet he succeeds at times in coming down almost to earth." Dial

Collected plays. Macmillan 1921 5v in 1 $3.50 822

21-3800

Contents: Aylmer's secret; Ulysses; Sin of David; Nero; Faust; Pietro of Siena

"In all these dramas the full onrush of poetic exclamation is made subservient in an admirably workmanlike way to the structure of the play as a whole. Therefore the mere diction of many passages is thin as to poetic content even while their dramatic value is high and they fulfil their proper function." Literary rev.

Another recommended play not included in the above collection is:
Phillips, Stephen. Paolo & Francesca; a tragedy in four acts. Dodd 1905 120p $2 Written in blank verse 822

Pinero, Sir Arthur Wing, 1855-1934

Priestley, John Boynton, 1894-

Four plays. Harper 1944 289p $2.50 822

(W) 44-8462

Contains the following plays: Music at night; Long mirror; They came to a city; Desert highway

"The English playwright's contribution to theater writing for the past six years, done with his usual flair for vivid characterization and unusual situation. Frankly experimental, hence independent of many formal stage trappings for their effect, these full-length dramas represent interesting variations on the problem play. Though modern in setting, all four have sequences in which the time element is manipulated freely to emphasize social content." Bkl.

Priestley, John B.—Continued

The Linden tree and An inspector calls; two plays. Harper 1948 2v in 1 $2.75 822

(W) 48-8983

"The Linden tree" concerns the Linden family at a crucial moment of their lives, interwoven with the conflict of age and youth. "An inspector calls" also deals with a family in a dramatic, tense situation

Rattigan, Terence Merryn, 1911-

Winslow boy; play in four acts. Dramatists 1946 126p front $2.25 822

47-16948

Characters: 6 men, 4 women. First produced in London May 23, 1946

"Dramatic study of the effects of a part in a long court trial on a middle-class family, based on the famous Archer-Schee case." Chicago

Shaw, George Bernard, 1856-

Androcles and the lion; Overruled; Pygmalion. Dodd 1916 cxxvii, 224p $3 822

16-9158

"Probably Mr. Shaw would consider the most important part of this volume to be his one hundred and twenty-seven page introduction to 'Androcles,' in which he sets forth in all its phases his theories of Christian sociology, beginning with a review and interpretation of the Four Gospels. 'Overruled' is a farcical comedy concerned with the gallantries of married people, the slight preface dealing with sex in conduct and art. 'Pygmalion' has no preface, but is provided with a sequel carrying forward the history of the characters several years and disposing of them in ways for which those who see the play without first reading the sequel will be scarcely prepared." Cleveland

Geneva, Cymbeline refinished, & Good King Charles. Dodd 1947 233p $3 822

(W) 47-28653

Here are two previously unpublished plays with their prefaces and a new ending for Shakespeare's "Cymbeline" with Shaw's explanation

* Complete works. Random house 1935 625p $3.50 822

35-27153

"Poems, dramas, translations, and prose works in one volume. Well printed with legible type but narrow margins. Attractive format, excellent binding." Bkl.

Plays included are: Playboy of the western world; Riders to the sea: In the shadow of the glen; Well of the saints; Tinker's wedding; Deirdre of the sorrows

Van Druten, John, 1901-

Voice of the turtle; a comedy in three acts. Random house 1944 160p front o.p. 1948 822

(W) 44-40061

Characters: 1 man, 2 women. First produced November 4, 1943. One set of scenery

A comedy of modern times. Sally, a very young, very pretty actress, catches Sergeant Bill on the rebound when her friend Olive drops him in favor of the Navy. The title, which is a quotation from The Song of Solomon, means that winter is over, the rain has stopped, and the world is lively

Another recommended play is:

Van Druten, John. Druid circle; a play in three acts. Dramatists 1948 176p $2.25 Copyrighted 1946 under the title: Professor White 822

Vane, Sutton, 1888-
Outward bound. Liveright 1924 170p $2
822
24-26312

"Scene opens in the saloon of an ocean liner. A group of somewhat mystified but otherwise ordinary human beings are the passengers. Gradually it dawns on them, as it does on the reader, that they have died and are 'outward bound.' The author has accomplished a difficult feat in making a play on this theme that is wise and humorous and tender." Wis. bul.

Webster, John, 1580?-1625?
Plays by Webster and Ford. Dutton 1933 336p (Everyman's lib) $1.25 822
A 34-393

Contents: White devil by J. Webster; Duchess of Malfi by J. Webster; Broken heart by J. Ford; 'Tis pity she's a whore by J. Ford

Wilde, Oscar, 1854-1900
Plays. Luce, J.W. 1905-20 4v $7.50, ea $2 822

Contents: v 1: Lady Windermere's fan; Woman of no importance. v2: Importance of being Earnest; Ideal husband. v3: Duchess of Padua; Vera; Salomé. v4: Florentine tragedy; La Sainte courtisane; Salomé (French text)

"Luckily the fame of Wilde's comedies does not rest on his plots and construction. It rests on his gifts of characterization and brilliant and effective dialogue. With these gifts and his very remarkable 'sense of the theater,' he might have been a great dramatist if he had been willing to take his art seriously." Fortnightly rev.

Plays of Oscar Wilde; introduction by Edgar Saltus. Modern lib. 216, 220p $1.25 822
33-23208

Contents: Salome; Importance of being Earnest; Lady Windermere's fan; Ideal husband; Woman of no importance

Williams, Emlyn, 1905-
Corn is green; a comedy in three acts. Random house 1941 184p illus o.p. 1948 822
(W) 41-13713

One set of scenery. Characters: 5 women, 10 men and supporting cast. First produced November 26, 1940

The play is a true picture of a backward section of Wales about thirty-five to fifty years ago

"Mr. Williams fills his canvas with rich humor, with vivid character sketches and with plenty of good theatre effects. . . His people, generous or stupid, silly, sensuous, bigoted or dull, have about them a genuine humanity that makes them credible." Theatre arts monthly

Zangwill, Israel, 1864-1926
Melting-pot; drama in four acts. New and rev. ed. Macmillan 1914 215p o.p. 1948 822
14-20542

"The author of this drama—his masterpiece—conceives of America as 'God's crucible, the great melting pot where all the races of Europe are melting and refining.' The play has inevitably been endlessly discussed, as a striking treatment of a topic of primary interest to the scientists, economists, and politicians of to-day." A. D. Dickinson

* Life of William Shakespeare. Houghton 1923 560p illus $3 822.3

1 Shakespeare, William, 1564-1616—Biography 23-9804

"Prof. Adams's researches in connection with the writing of 'Shakespearean Playhouses' have furnished him with a complete background of contemporary theatrical life against which to picture the dramatist. The book is therefore not only a clear and full biography of Shakespeare but a history of the theater of the day and of his relations with it as actor, playwright and theater proprietor." Book rev. digest

"Distinguished by both scholarship and clarity, by accuracy in detail and devotion to the memory of Shakespeare." International book review

"The first third is an account of Shakespeare's life. . . The second part is more technical: a discussion of Shakespeare's medium, which is to say, the theatre of his time, the limitations and conventions of his stage, and the mechanics of his verse. The third part is a detailed and critical examination of each of the thirty-six plays." Book-of-the-month club news

" 'Shakespeare,' by Mark Van Doren . . . is a sensitive appreciation of Shakespeare's art, conducive to more enjoyable reading of the plays. The present book is aimed at more informed reading, for it summarizes the facts that scholarly research has unveiled about the dramatist's life and the Elizabethan theater, and gives a short critical estimate of each play. Illustrated with portraits of Shakespearian actors and old prints. Classified, annotated bibliography: p417-75." Bkl.

This book was written out of the conviction that "the interest of the plays as they have come down to us exceeds the interest either of the individual who wrote them or of the age that produced him." One chapter is devoted to each play and one to the poems

"The book is written on a level of original but unpretentious insight and is remarkable for its closeness to the plays. Nowhere does Mr. Van Doren depend for effect on grand generalizations. His comments seem to stream naturally out of the dramas; they are not superimposed upon them. A wise and distinguished book." New Yorker

"The director of the Maurice Evans productions [1942, treats of] Shakespeare from the dramatic standpoint. . . She first discusses Shakespeare and the productions of his times; secondly, the general problems of Shakespearean acting and production. The last half deals with the plays individually and interpretatively, their qualities, their dramatic feasibility, etc." Kirkus

"Miss Webster writes lightly, easily and with an abundant sense of humor. For the understanding playgoer there is not an obscure or otherwise dull page in the book. Moore, George, 1852-1933

Conversations in Ebury street. Liveright 1924 315p $2.50 824

24-30885

"A collection of papers on literary subjects and on art, many of them in the form of dialogs between the writer and the visitors to his house in Ebury street. The French writers, Balzac, Verlaine and others are favorite subjects, while Shakespeare, George Eliot, Hardy and a few English contemporaries receive briefer notice." Bkl.

"It is one of those rare books which, coming to the end of it, one feels it would be a pleasure to begin over again. . . This book shows us Mr. Moore in his old age, without any flagging of his powers of imagination, still conscientiously perfecting his prose style, for much of the prose in Conversations in Ebury Street is the most perfect he has written." Spectator

"Since the 1920's, in Germany and now in the United States, Bertolt Brecht has written poetry, plays, novels and films, and his overall contribution to contemporary writing is considerable. H. R. Hays . . . has chosen for this volume a selection of Brecht poems with both English and German text, and in addition to the poems proper, a selection of songs and ballads from the most famous Brecht plays: The Three-Penny Opera, The Mother, etc." Publisher's note

Heine, Heinrich, 1797-1856

Heinrich Heine: paradox and poet, by Louis Untermeyer; the poems. Harcourt 1937 xxxii, 444p front o.p. 1948 831

Mr Untermeyer's first volume of translations of Heine's poems, containing a selection of three hundred and twenty-five, appeared in 1917 and in a revised edition in 1923. This new volume contains more than five hundred poems, many of them here translated for the first time. Several poems of considerable length, such as "For 'La Mouche,'" "The God Apollo" and "Jehuda ben Halevy," are also included. Most of the earlier translations have been revised, some of them entirely rewritten

"Naturally, those versions, good as some of them are, cannot satisfy any one familiar with the originals. . . On the whole, however, in spite of occasional mistranslations and some errors of taste, it is a competent performance." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Three plays; Prisoners of war; 1918; Dutch merchant; tr. by Emma D. Ashton. Viking 1934 306p o.p. 1948 832

34-38162

"Three plays by Lion Feuchtwanger written during or just after the war are now translated into English by Emma D. Ashton. 'Prisoners of War' has title of interest to recommend it, but '1918,' cast in an episodic form to suggest the extensive field a novel might cover and 'The Dutch Merchant,' are interesting as revelations, respectively of the first high hopes for the German Republic, and the author's subsequent retreat to individualism." [22-1472]

Analyzed in Essay and general literature index

"Professor Spingarn calls his selection the first attempt to include in a single volume the whole range of Goethe's critical and esthetic studies, and Viscount Haldane in his foreword to the book says: 'Goethe's gifts as a critic fell within a large whole of knowledge which was his in a degree for which we must look back over two thousand years to Aristotle if we wish to find a rival.' The translations are from various sources and some of the essays included have never before appeared in English. The essays are grouped under the headings: The theory of art; The theory of literature; On Shakespeare; On other writers; Extracts from the conversations with Eckermann. There is a chronology of Goethe's critical studies and an index." Book rev. digest

1 Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von, 1749-1832 49-9881

"The present volume contains two very important new documents, never before translated into English: an essay on 'Goethe the Philosopher,' and an address 'Goethe as Thinker and Man,' both dating from 1932. The other two Goethe addresses appeared in print a year ago in partly abridged versions. . . To a certain extent, Schweitzer is creating in his own image a Goethe who is not so much the poet, the artistic genius struggling with his demon, as a Goethe who is a symbol and embodiment of a great ethical idea, the faithful student and philosopher of nature, the great exemplar of a rarely achieved balance between spiritual creativity and practical activity in selfless service to his fellowman." Poetic Edda; tr. from the Icelandic with an introduction and notes by Henry Adams Bellows. Am.-Scandinavian foundation 1923 2v in 1 front (Scandinavian classics) $4 839.6

23-16414

"The book is the bible of Northern mythology, morality, and literature. Its leading mythological poem, 'Voluspo,' a sort of Genesis and Apocalypse combined, is an imaginative conception of the creation and ultimate destruction of the world. The 'Hovamol' a collection of shrewd saws, gives a picture of the ethical conceptions of the Vikings. The Lady of Thrym is a ballad. In the poems of Sigurd and Brynhild we get the Norse version of the Lay of the Nibelungs." Springfield Republican

Bjørnson, Bjørnstjerne, 1832-1910

Plays; tr. by Edwin Bjørkman. Scribner 1913-14 2v o.p. 1948 839.8

Contents: v 1: Gauntlet; Beyond our power; New system. v2: Love and geography; Beyond human might; Laboremus

"The gauntlet," his best known play, has for its theme the double standard. "Beyond our power" is concerned with psycho-pathological phenomena. "New system" is a social satire. "Love and geography" is a play of domestic relations, "Beyond human might" of capital and labor, and "Laboremus" is a psychological study of individualism

"They rank among the greatest dramas of the nineteenth century, differing from those of Ibsen in that they are always human and always optimistic." Pratt alcove

1 Danish poetry 23-6268

"A collection of poetry from the works of the foremost Danish poets from Adam Oehlenschläger, who wrote in the first half of the last century, to Johannes Jensen in our own times. The poets represented are as follows: Adam Oehlenschläger; Carsten Hauch; N. F. S. Grundtvig; B. S. Ingemann; Poul Möller; Christian Winther; Ludvig Bödtcher; Emil Aarestrup; Hans Christian Andersen; Frederik Paludan-Müller; J. P. Jacobsen; Holger Drachmann; Viggo Stuckenberg; Johannes Jörgensen; Ludvig Holstein; Helge Rode; Jeppe Aakjaer; Sophus Claussen; Johannes V. Jensen." Book rev. digest

"One can only marvel at the apparent ease and understanding with which S. Foster Damon and Robert Silliman Hillyer translated from the originals. If anything has been lost in the translation it is not perceptible here." Bookman first of Kierkegaard's important contributions to Danish literature, and established his fame as a writer. . . An ethical view of life is here contrasted with a purely aesthetic attitude. The aestheticist is the author of the papers that constitute the first volume, and is here designated as A; the ethicist B is responsible for the second volume, consisting of letters written to A, couched in terms of friendly admonition. "The plan of this outline has been 'to relate Spanish literature to the geographic, ethnic, social, and historic facts which have determined it,' and to stress the evolution and development of the great schools of writing as they have appeared. The book thus sketches the history of Spanish literature from its beginnings to modern writers of note, furnishing biographical data concerning the writers, and a sketch of their important works, and wherever possible grouping authors in the schools to which they belong." Four plays; in English versions by Helen and Harley Granville-Barker. . . Sidgwick 1927 296p 10s 6d 862

The brothers Alvarez Quintero were leading playwrights in Spain, with a hundred and fifty plays to their credit during many years of collaboration. Contents: Women have their way; Hundred years old; Fortunato; Lady from Alfaqueque

" 'The women have their way' tells how a young man, coming from Madrid to an Andalusian town, is edged into a betrothal by the gossip of the women. It is 'the tragedy of El Gran Galeoto turned to laughter.' In 'A hundred years old' Papa Juan celebrates his hundredth birthday. 'Fortunato' portrays the plight of a deserving man who cannot earn a living for himself and his children. 'The lady from Alfaqueque' is a satire on privincial clannishness." Cleveland

"After a brief introduction there is a discussion of Cervantes and chivalry books. . . Two more preliminary chapters have to do with the character of Dorothea as an example of cleverness and of Cardenio as the type of cowardice. These chapters will make their appeal rather to the close student of the book than to the so-called general reader for whom the book means the knight and the squire. To those two great central characters Señor Madariaga comes at length and . . . we have close and subtle analyses of both, in which the intermixture of idealism and doubt in the Don is carefully disclosed, the growth of idealism in Sancho is shown, and the reciprocal action of each on the other is traced and developed." "Professional men of letters have always liked Ovid for his sincerity, his vivacity, his imagination. His imagination is at its best in the 'Metamorphoses' in which he put together many of the Greek and Graeco-Roman myths. . . . Perhaps Ovid never wrote a stunningly great line . . . but he was a born story-teller and a poet of really extraordinary facility. [19-6668]

Each selection has the Latin original with an English prose translation opposite. Catullus and Tibullus are separately indexed. The translation of Catullus was made by F. W. Cornish, Tibullus by J. P. Postgate, and the "Pervigilium Veneris" by J. W. Mackail

"Tibullus was the father of the Roman elegy. . . The style of his poems and their tone of thought are like his character, deficient in vigor and manliness, but sweet, smooth, polished, tender, and never disfigured by bad taste." A. C. L. Botta's Handbook of universal literature

Horace

Odes and Epodes; with an English tr. by C. E. Bennett. Rev. ed. Harvard univ. press 1927 430p (Loeb classical lib) $2.50 874

[19-10172]

These are good literal prose translations of the Odes, Epodes and Carmen saeculare, opposite the original Latin. There is a short introductory chapter on the life and works of Horace, followed by a chapter on the metres he used. An index of proper names refers to the Latin originals by number and line

Horace—Continued

"In Latin poetry Horace ranks second only to Virgil. The grace, beauty, sanity, and geniality in the verse of this Roman of the Augustan age have long made it a favourite with men of letters, many of whom have delighted to translate and imitate him. So modern is his spirit that even today he is brought to the attention of tired commuters by the 'Colyumists' of the evening newspapers." A. D. Dickinson

Satires, Epistles and Ars poetica; with an English tr. by H. Rushton Fairclough. Harvard univ. press 1926 xxx, 508p (Loeb classical lib) $2.50 874

The translator "has succeeded in reproducing much of the idiomatic forcefulness and skilful turn of the thought, in the Latin original. His introduction supplies some useful bibliographical help." Providence

Horace's Satires sketch boldly but good-humoredly the social life of his day. The Epistles are simple, friendly correspondence, in which we find the man Horace, without a trace of the moral teacher or censor. His "Art of poetry," a brief and apparently casual letter, has had great influence on modern literature

875 Latin oratory

Cicero, Marcus Tullius

De officiis; with an English tr. by Walter Miller. Harvard univ. press 1913 423p front (Loeb classical lib) $2.50 875

[14-5345]

"The offices," or "Duties," is a stoical treatise on moral obligations, in the form of a letter addressed to his son Marcus, who was a student in Athens. Cicero himself looked upon it as his masterpiece. This edition presents the Latin text with a literal translation opposite. The three parts of the essay are headed Moral goodness, Expediency, and Conflict between the right and the expedient. Well indexed

"Cicero's unique and imperishable glory is . . . that he created a language which remained for sixteen centuries that of the civilised world, and used that language to create a style which nineteen centuries have not replaced, and in some respects have scarcely altered." J. W. Mackail's Latin literature

De senectute, De amicitia, De divinatione; with an English tr. by William Armistead Falconer. Harvard univ. press 1923 567p (Loeb classical lib) $2.50 875

[23-12099]

These three essays are cast in the form of discourses after the manner of Aristotle. "Cato the Elder on old age" and "Laelius on friendship" are famed for beauty of style and delicacy of feeling. "On divination," which purports to be a conversation between Cicero and his brother, is directed against belief in the auspices and superstition in general. The English translation faces the Latin original on opposite pages. Each essay has a separate index to proper names

Philippics; with an English tr. by Walter C. A. Ker. Harvard univ. press 1926 655p (Loeb classical lib) $2.50 875

[27-2023]

The most famous of Cicero's orations, his indignant and eloquent speeches against Antonius after the assassination of Caesar. Each speech is preceded by a critical and explanatory introduction, and Latin and English texts are given on opposite pages

"Six of the seven orations contained in this volume are connected with one of the best known and least significant episodes in Roman history—the conspiracy of Catiline. They were delivered in the years 63 and 62 B.C. The seventh, Pro Flacco, was the last speech, now extant, made by Cicero before his banishment. Its date is 59 B.C." Prefatory note

Pliny, the younger

Letters, with an English tr. by William Melmoth, rev. by W. M. L. Hutchinson. Harvard univ. press 1915 2v (Loeb classical lib) ea $2.50 876

[16-654]

"Translations with accompanying Latin text of the 'Epistolae' of Pliny the Younger. These letters are models of refined thought and elegant expression. They reveal the occupations and interests of a cultured Roman gentleman of wealth, leisure, and influence during the first century. This translation by Melmoth, himself a talented letter-writer, first published in 1746, ranks as a lesser English classic because of its own literary merit and its accurate reflection of the spirit of the original." Apuleius

Golden ass; being the Metamorphoses, with an English tr. by W. Adlington (1566) rev. by S. Gaselee. Harvard univ. press 1915 xxiv, 607p front (Loeb classical lib) $2.50 877

[16-655]

This edition has parallel Latin and English versions. The translation was made in 1566, but has been revised for this series. Contains a brief three-page life of Apuleius

The "Metamorphoses" or "Golden ass" was founded on an older work, which Apuleius made the groundwork of an elaborate romance, interspersed with numerous episodes, of which the beautiful story of Cupid and Psyche is the most celebrated

Juvenal, Decimus Junius

Juvenal and Persius; with an English tr. by G. G. Ramsay. Harvard univ. press 1918 lxxxii, 415p (Loeb classical lib) $2.50 877

[18-21762]

Juvenal's sixteen satires and Persius's six with parallel Latin and English prose versions. The introduction presents biographical material, criticisms, comparisons and summaries of the satires, and bibliographies of the two poets. Brief index for each. The texts are based on Bucheler's edition

"Juvenal is the most savage—one might almost say the most brutal—of the Roman satirists." J. W. Mackail's Latin literature

Persius died young, and left only six satires, which show keen observation, dramatic power and charm, in spite of his youth and comparatively narrow experience

Nixon, Paul, 1882-

Martial and the modern epigram. Longmans 1927 208p (Our debt to Greece and Rome) $2 877

1 Epigrams 2 Martial 27-7987

"Perhaps one of the best things in this book is the opening chapter, which defines the epigram. Also, the author deals very effectively with the various periods. . . . Over three hundred of Martial's epigrams are included, most of them very happily translated by the author. It is a good reference work, made preeminently so by its index which enables one to find easily in Martial the original of each translation." Providence

Because of the large number of translations included, this volume can take the place of a collection of Martial's work in the smaller libraries. If a more complete edition is desired the following is recommended:

Caesar, Caius Julius

Gallic war; with an English tr. by H. J. Edwards. Harvard univ. press 1917 xxii, 619p front (Loeb classical lib) $2.50 878

[17-28110]

Latin text with parallel English translation, literal and scholarly. The introduction outlines Caesar's life and work and furnishes a brief analysis of the seven books. The appendixes contain chapters on the Roman army and Britain. Nine maps and plans are interspersed thru the text. There are four indexes—persons, tribes, geography and subjects

"It has probably been more widely read (if that school-room grind can be called reading) than any other Latin book. Many of us learned to hate it in our youth. . . But the mature reader who turns to Caesar's works . . . will find them immensely interesting, swift, vigorous stories. The 'Gallic war' is the basis of half our knowledge of the northern provinces of Rome, which have since become great modern nations." J. Macy's Story of the world's literature

Caesar, C. J. Civil wars; with an English tr. by A. G. Peskett. Harvard univ. press 1914 369p illus (Loeb classical lib) $2.50 878

"An interesting essay, with bibliography and notes, written with keen historical sense, using the past to interpret the present, succeeding amazingly in giving life to the descriptions of the times, ideas and people of the early Roman empire, pointing out the influence of the philosophy of Seneca upon modern European and American civilization." Bkl.

Sallust

Sallust; with an English tr. by J. C. Rolfe. Harvard univ. press 1921 xxii, 535p (Loeb classical lib) $2.50 878

[21-6979]

The orations and letters of Sallust and the pseudo-Sallustian works. There is an introduction on the life of Sallust, the pseudo-Sallustian works, and the manuscripts. Contains a bibliography and index. The original text and translation are on opposite pages

"His histories have not only the charm of the historical romance, but are also valuable political studies. His characters are vigorously and naturally drawn, and the more his histories are read, the more obvious it is that he always writes with an object, and uses his facts as the means of enforcing a great political lesson." A. C. L. Botta's Handbook of universal literature

Seneca, Lucius Annaeus

Moral essays; with an English tr. by John W. Basore. Harvard univ. press 1928-35 3v (Loeb classical lib) ea $2.50 878

(28-16432)

The original Latin and the English translation are given on opposite pages

"As a moral writer, Seneca stands deservedly high. Though infected with the rhetorical vices of the age, his treatises are full of striking and often gorgeous eloquence, and in their combination of high thought with deep feeling, have rarely, if at all, been surpassed." J. W. Mackail's Latin literature

Suetonius Tranquillus, Caius

Suetonius; with an English tr. by J. C. Rolfe. Harvard univ. press 1914 2v (Loeb classical lib) ea $2.50 878

[14-4948]

Contents: Lives of the Caesars; Lives of illustrious men; Grammarians and rhetoricians; Poets. Text with parallel English translation. Contains biographical, bibliographical and critical notes, and a very good index

"The use which he makes of historical documents proves that he was a man of diligent research, and, as a biographer, industrious and careful. He indulges neither in ornament of style nor in romantic exaggeration. The pictures which he draws of some of the Caesars are indeed terrible, but they are fully supported by the contemporary authority of Juvenal and Tacitus." A. C. L. Botta's Handbook of universal literature

Tacitus, Cornelius

Dialogus, Agricola, Germania. Harvard univ. press 1914 371p (Loeb classical lib) $2.50 878

[32-16143]

Latin and English on opposite pages. The "Dialogus" is translated by William Peterson, the "Agricola" and "Germania" by Maurice Hutton. The first is a dialog on oratory. The second is a brief biography of his father-in-law, Agricola, who was governor of Roman Britain. "Germania," perhaps his best known work, records his observations of the barbarous inhabitants of Germany

If a library needs more complete editions of Tacitus, the following are recommended:

Tacitus, Cornelius. Complete works of Tacitus: The annals; The history; The life of Cnaeus Julius Agricola; Germany and its tribes; A dialogue on oratory; tr. from the Latin by Alfred John Church and William Jackson Brodribb; ed. and with an introduction by Moses Hadas. Gesta Romanorum

Gesta Romanorum. . . tr. by Charles Swan. Dutton 1924 xx, 472p (Broadway translations) o.p. 1948 879

24-18459

One of the most popular collections of tales in the later middle ages, probably told by the monks and used as examples in their sermons. These brief stories, which were supposedly based on Roman history (hence the title, "Deeds of the Romans") furnished plot and inspiration for many of the greatest poets—Chaucer, Gower, Shakespeare, Schiller, etc.

"Begun as an introduction to a volume of translations from medieval Latin lyrics, this book has grown to be a fairly full account of the classic tradition that 'came to its wild flowering' in the rhyming Latin lyric of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries." Saturday rev.

"A fascinating book most readers will find this, for with all its sophistication it has grace and charm as well, and its nimble wit and happy renderings of Latin verse draw the unfamiliar reader into some real touch with medieval life." Amer. hist. rev.

The authors "have undertaken and accomplished a rather overpowering task: to outline the development of Latin literature from the time when it ceased to be 'classical' till it died a natural death with the death of Latin as a universal language. Their field covers from the fourth to the seventeenth century. . . On the earlier periods the book is admirably clear and detailed. A better introduction could hardly be required by anyone. . . There is an excellent bibliography and an index." New statesman and Nation

Every piece in "The Oxford book of Greek verse," published 1930 is here translated, and the same arrangement of authors and numeration is followed, except for some minor differences. Two introductory essays deal with character and development of Greek poetry and Greek poetry in translation

The editors "have not confined themselves to any one period for their translations, and the reader will find the best by both classical and modern authors: the choice runs from Pope and Gilbert Murray to T. E. Lawrence and Louis MacNeice. The originals cover the whole period of Greek verse from Homer through the classical dramatists to Bion and Moschus. In addition . . . prefaces by the editors outline the form and structure of Greek verse, and show the obstacles to be surmounted"

883 Greek epic poetry: Homer

Homer

Iliad; tr. into English blank verse by William Cullen Bryant. Roslyn ed. Houghton 2v in 1 $4 883

4-14077

Bryant's version reads less like a translation than one would expect of a metrical version. It is in the same meter as his own "Thanatopsis," and is particularly happy in descriptive passages

Iliad; with an English tr. by A. T. Murray. Harvard univ. press 1924-25 2v (Loeb classical lib) ea $2.50 883

[25-4962]

Prose translation, smooth and readable. The editor has attempted not to include controversial matters in the notes, but he is convinced of the single authorship of the poem. Index of names in the Greek

‡ Iliad; with introduction by Louise Pound. . . translations by Lang, Leaf and Myers. Macmillan xx, 460p $2 883

[30-18456]

The best prose translation, both scholarly and readable

Another recommended edition is:

Homer. Iliad; a line for line translation in dactylic hexameters by William Benjamin Smith and Walter Miller; illus. with the classical designs of John Flaxman. Macmillan 1944 xx, 565p illus $3.75 883

Odyssey; tr. into English blank verse by William Cullen Bryant. Roslyn ed. Houghton 1899 2v in 1 $4 883

Odyssey; tr. by George Herbert Palmer. Houghton 1912 xxiv, 387p illus map $2.50 883

[13-24614]

An excellent prose translation. There is a fairly short introduction, but there are no notes nor indexes

"We are happiest in point of accuracy, facility and sheer enjoyment if we read a prose translation, that of George Herbert Palmer." J. Macy's Story of the world's literature

‡ Odyssey; newly tr. into English prose [by T. E. Shaw]. Oxford 327p $2.25 883

[32-28146]

This translation was first published in 1932. In this reprint the margins have been trimmed, and a new preface added. A map of the wanderings of Odysseus has been added on the end-papers

"It seems to me that even if the translator's name had never been heard before this volume would be destined to rank among the half-dozen most eminent translations of the Odyssey in English." Henry Hazlitt in Nation

‡ Odyssey; done into English prose by S. H. Butcher and A. Lang. Macmillan 1921 xxiv, 429p illus $1.60 883

Theocritus

Theocritus, Bion and Moschus; rendered into English prose with an introductory essay by A. Lang. Macmillan 1889 xlii, 210p (Golden treasury ser) $1.50 884

[2-15397]

Charming prose translation of the "idyls" of a noted Greek bucolic poet of the third century B.C., including also the writings of two less known Greek pastoral poets, Bion of Smyrna, and Moschus of Sicily. The 31 page introduction on Theocritus and his age is valuable

"Theocritus is perhaps the most universally attractive of all Greek poets. . . One might almost say that there is hardly anything beautiful in the pastoral poetry of the world that does not come from Theocritus. His first idyll, the "Dirge on Daphnis,' has perhaps had a greater number of celebrated imitations than any poem of its length in existence—from Bion's 'Adonis,'' Moschus's 'Bion,' Vergil's 'Daphnis,' to our own 'Lycidas,' 'Adonais,' and 'Thyrsis.'" Bhagavadgītā; with an introductory essay, Sanskrit text, English tr. and notes by S. Radhakrishnan. Harper 1948 338p $3.50 891.2

48-10146

"As the utterances of Jesus are to Christians so is the 'Song of the Blessèd one' to Hindus. Although of special importance to the sectaries of god Vishnu, its verses are on the lips of others, so truly does it voice common Hindu ideas. The theme of the Bhagavadgita is man's relation to God; the teacher is God himself incarnate as Krishna." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Panchatantra

Panchatantra; tr. from the Sanskrit by Arthur W. Ryder. Univ. of Chicago press 1925 470p $4.50 891.2

25-21523

"In these 'five books,' the wise conduct of life is revealed with wit and wisdom through animal actors. A readable narrative, fresh in spite of its great antiquity, having been told in India over 2000 years ago. Each book has a framing tale, with many inserted stories and epigrammatic verses. First complete English collection. Translation is excellent." N.Y. state lib.

"Eight moralistic plays and the collected poems of the Hindu philosopher, poet, and educator. The plays are: Chitra; The post office; The cycle of spring; Sanyasi, or the Ascetic; Malini; Sacrifice; The king and the queen; Karna and Kunti. Index of first lines." Book rev. digest

"It is to be regretted that this volume, involving as it does not only a renaissance of Indian literature, but a contribution of gracious purity to English literature, should be edited without introduction, foreword, or preface of any kind, and without notes on deletions or on any of the translations. That it is, however, an invaluable collation need hardly be stated." Boston Transcript

Cuchulain

Cuchulain of Muirthemne: the story of the men of the Red Branch of Ulster; arranged and put into English by Lady Gregory. . . Scribner 1902 360p $2.75 891.6

[3-2086]

W. B. Yeats has written a preface to this edition. Lady Gregory here retells the old Irish tales, and her version is a blend of scholarship and imaginative reconstruction. The stories are coordinated and compressed into a homogeneous narrative that should be called a folk-version of the old saga, adapted to literature, rather than a translation

First published 1894. Authoritative and readable brief work which has proved popular. The scope is rather limited, and make-up and type are not good. But it is valuable for early Irish literature to the 18th century, and contains translated extracts of both prose and poetry

Mabinogion

Mabinogion; tr. by Lady Charlotte Guest [pseud] Dutton 432p (Everyman's lib) o.p. 1948 891.6

A 10-2213

A translation from the Welsh, of 11 tales from the "Red book of Hergest," a 14th century manuscript, and one tale of Lady Charlotte Guest, the first and best translator of this bardic literature, assigned to her collection the title "Mabinogion," meaning roughly the traditional lore acquired by aspiring bards. Some of the stories are pre-Christian and pre-historic, some reflect the Roman administration of British, and some center about Arthur

"In one sense this book is a history and criticism of soviet Russian literature, in another it questions the relationship of art —and especially literature—and propaganda. Eastman discusses the situation with wit, insight and common sense. His prejudices against Stalin are evident and he pokes fun at the Marxian notion that 'human nature is a mere function of the evolution of economic forces.' " Cincinnati

"The lyrics . . . are practically all of the Sung period (tenth-thirteenth centuries). The poetry of this period has been hitherto comparatively neglected by translators as being more academic than inspired. Some of the authors here represented, such as Ou-yang Hsiu and Sung Ch'i, were eminent as men of letters rather than specifically as poets. . . We agree with Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch in enjoying the cadences which the translator has found for his English versions. It is quite remarkable that a Chinese should be able to render these poems not only in perfect English idiom but with such sensibility to the musical value of English words." This, the first history of Chinese literature in any language, still has the unqualified approval of Chinese scholars. It can only serve as an introduction to a literature which has flourished since six or more centuries before the Christian era, but as an introduction it is more than adequate. A large part of the book is devoted to translations made by the author, and remarks by native critics, so that the reader may form some idea of the Chinese point of view. The translations include many poems, extracts from prose works, and synopses of dramas

"The product of the author's twenty-five years of exploration and research from the Arctic to the tropics. . . Forms a challenge to those who believe we are headed for destruction and shows how our world is going through a period of geographical expansion on all fronts. Tremendous new exploring activities reveal that undeveloped peoples as well as undeveloped territories offer the 'new frontiers.'" Huntting

"Completely unorthodox in his approach to geography is the author 'New Worlds Emerging,' whose book contains not even one footnote by past generations of worthy men to bolster his arguments. He depends almost entirely on what he has found out himself." Christian science monitor

1 Geography 38-939
Reprint of title first published 1932 by Simon & Schuster
"Van Loon's Geography, like his well-known Story of Mankind, was written for children, but in a way that grown-ups may learn a good deal from it. The simplicity of Mr. Van Loon's language is perhaps overdone, but unquestionably he has genuine humor, and for the sake of his real insight and sound knowledge one is inclined to overlook some of his artificiality. . . He can sum up in two or three pages not only the physical features but the entire history of a country. And his drawings, of which there are one hundred and fifty, are really amusing. From dry and unimaginative maps and charts he has made a gallery of pictures, surprising in their immense variety and—emotional quality." Boston

1 Geography—Dictionaries 22-6136

Published in 1905 under title, "Lippincott's new gazetteer." The 1922 edition is the same as the one of 1905, with the inclusion of the 1910 and 1920 census statistics. Reissued in 1931 with the substitution at the end of the volume of the conspectus of the 1930 census of the United States in place of earlier information

"Includes in one alphabet names of cities, towns, rivers, mountains, lakes and other geographical features, and gives for each the pronunciation of its name, information about other names by which the place was known, location, altitude, etc., and in the case of towns, population figures, and brief information about local industries, finances, history, educational and other institutions, etc. . . This work is usually sufficient for ordinary gazetteer questions for which up-to-date, or post war information is not required." Mudge

1 U.S.—Historical geography—Maps (W) Map 43-126

This "atlas enables the user to locate quickly—and with relation to other places of importance in the same area and period—every event of geographical importance in American history. . . An index of some 10,000 locations guides the user instantly to the proper map on which to find the place for which he is looking—and the volume is 7¼" x 10¼" in size." Huntting

"Intended to meet the need for a concise, easy to use, authoritative atlas, its chronologically arranged, clearly drawn maps give evidence of the careful editorial work of 64 historians. . . There is no commentary except brief paragraphs on the maps themselves. The place index is a valuable guide to names no longer in use in this country." Current reference bks.

1 Maps (W) 49-9542
"This is the story of maps: the men who made them and the methods they employed, what can be found on them and the devious ways by which the information required for their compilation was obtained." Introduction
" 'The Story of Maps' felicitously marries scholarship to narrative and dramatic skill. Though Mr. Brown has deliberately omitted the familiar and exciting story of geographical exploration, he has managed to infuse the seemingly dull subject of cartography with interest, and he has done this without making improper concessions to popularization. The numerous and carefully drawn illustrations that accompany the text add greatly to its usefulness and beauty." N.Y. Herald Tribune

1 Civilization, Greek 41-4255

"This survey of Greek civilization makes no pretensions to being a history of Greek civilization. . . What is attempted . . . in the present volume is a sort of composite picture of the best that Greece achieved for herself and has contributed and may still contribute to the life of modern men and of modern nations." Preface

The book is divided into four parts: Greece yesterday and today; Home life of the ancient Greeks; Public life of the ancient Greeks; Literature and art

1 Classical dictionaries (W) 49-7954

"This dictionary—[to] 337 A.D.—gives the classical field comprehensive treatment. Bibliographies and bibliographical articles are provided as well as general articles on large subject groupings as: Art and Classical Music. Alphabetically arranged." Huntting

"Will afford pleasure to men and women of three groups—to the cultivated reader who enjoys dictionary-browsing in moments of leisure; to the student researcher; and to the specialist seeking that information which other specialists can supply. So great is its range, and so many are the scholars who have helped to build it, that it seems almost hubris for anyone to attempt a review." Spectator

1 Civilization, Greek 2 Greece—Antiquities 3 Greece—Social life and customs [31-20210]

"The second book in a series dealing with everyday life in ancient Greece. This volume covers the period from the time of the Trojan war to the Battle of Salamis in 488. Contains map, historical chart, and index." Book rev. digest

"This is an aspect of Greek life which has perhaps been somewhat neglected in this country, and we are grateful for a book which presents in so readable a form the results of research, not readily available in textbooks, into such subjects as the furniture and dress, food and cooking of the age, and which embellishes them with attractive and informative illustrations. The authors have, however, naturally enough, included some consideration of the artistic achievement of the Greeks of this period, and here they are less successful." Times (London) lit. sup.

1 Greece—Social life and customs 34-2387

"This concise account of Greek civilization will serve both the classical beginner and the non-classical student. The land and its scenery are vividly described and illustrated. The development of society is traced from the earliest times to the end of the classical age. Naturally most of the book concerns classical Athens, but there is a chapter on Sparta. There are chapters on politics, society, trades, art and recreations, religion and education." Times (London) lit. sup.

1 Crete—Antiquities A 10-1400

An account of archeological research in Crete which is interesting for the general reader

"The author writes with keen but tempered enthusiasm of the 'finds' at Cnossus, Phaestus, and Hagia Triada, and what they seem to show. . . The relations of Crete with Greece, the Cyclades, and Egypt are discussed and illustrated by parallelisms in pottery, sculpture, and metal-working; and about thirty excellent halftone plates show the principal architectural and artistic results of the various excavations."
